CAUTION.—As some of the most valuable of MENDELSSOHN'S MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS still remain the COPYRIGHT of EWER and Co., the Public are hereby informed that no one else can publish a COMPLETE EDITION of them.

Ewer and Co., 390, Oxford-street.

Mendelssohn's "Lieder ohne Worte."

CAUTION TO MUSIC PUBLISHERS & MUSIC SELLERS.

MENDELSSOHN'S LIEDER OHNE WORTE, Book I., Op. 19, was composed, written, and first printed in England during the Author's residence in this country, thereby fulfilling the conditions particularized in the statutes regulating copyright; and J. Alfred Novello is therefore advised, by high legal authority, that his copyright in this work can be successfully maintained—which he is fully determined to do against all who may pirate that work, or any other of Mendelssohn's works similarly circumstanced, and against all who may sell such pirated copies. Publishers will do well to bear in mind the wide difference between this case and that of Bellini (Boosey v. Jefferies), lately reversed by the House of Lords, the distinction having been pointed out by the Law Lords in delivering their judgments.

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

All Mendelssohn's works will continue to be sold at the reduced prices, now for many years charged for them, by J. Alfred Novello. During the time when the rights of Foreign Authors (who had conferred on the British public the benefit of first printing their works here) were better protected by the legal practice of this country than they are likely to be in future, J. A. Novello thinks he may point out with some pride that he has constantly sold his copyrights at very small prices, without waiting to be forced to reduce them by the indecent scramble consequent on the late deplorable judgment of the House of Lords—a judgment reversing the decisions, and given against the opinions, of a large majority of the Judges of the land.
